GIVEN UP ALL HOPE

Eczema Turning to Blood Poison. Treated by Specialists Seven Months Without One Particle of Success.

BODY RUNNING SORES.

Condition Terrible. Life a Burden. Tried Cuticura. In Three Days Attends to Business. Cure Permanent.

In the spring of 1891 I took that dreadful skin disease, Eczema, which turned into blood poison. I consulted the best known specialists in this city. They treated me for seven months, I never derived a particle of good from any of them. They had given it up as a hopeless cure. I was covered with sores from head to foot, I had running sores all over me, some of them as large as a box of your CUTICURA. It cost me hundreds of dollars with these so-called specialists. My condition was terrible, life was almost a burden to me. I could not eat, drink or sleep, I was unable to walk and had given myself up as dead. I tried all medicines imaginable, until a friend who had got relief advised me to try CUTICURA REMEDIES. I sent out and got them, and when I took the first dose of your CUTICURA RESOLVENT I felt a little better, with three boxes of your most valuable CUTICURA and one bottle of CUTICURA RESOLVENT I was a new man. In three days I was up walking around and attending to my business, and it is the CUTICURA and CUTICURA RESOLVENT that saved me from the jaws of death. This is two years ago. I wanted to see if it had been driven out of my system, and I can say I have never had any trouble since for two years.

People Who Weigh and Compare

Know and get the best. Cottolene, the new vegetable shortening, has won a wide and wonderful popularity. At its introduction it was submitted to expert chemists, prominent physicians and famous cooks. All of these pronounced a natural, healthful and acceptable food-product, better than lard for every cooking purpose.

The success of Cottolene is now a matter of history. Will you share in the better food and better health for which it stands, by using it in your home?

Avoid imitations—countless—worthless. Stick to COTTOLENE.

The State Official Returns.

HARRISBURG, November 15.

The official vote from all the counties in the State for State Treasurer and Judge of the Supreme Court was tabulated in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth to day.

The total vote for State Treasurer is 777,760, which is 12,546 less than that cast for the same office two years ago. The Democratic vote is 51,515 less than that polled for the candidate of that party in 1891 and the Republican vote shows an increase of 29,654. As compared with last year's Presidential vote the Republican loss is 73,763 and the Democratic loss is 145,162, while the total reduction reaches 225,250 votes. The vote for Judge of the Supreme Court is over 3,000 less than that polled for State Treasurer, and the plurality of Judge Fell, Republican, is 133,581, or 1,565 less than that obtained by Colonel Jackson.

How The Apples Swim

The jubilant Republican editors are quite sure now that good times are coming, sufficient cause for them having been given by Republican victory. How else can it be, they say, than that Republican success means business prosperity. The simple souls cannot believe that anything can go wrong while the Republican party succeeds, notwithstanding their abundant experience to the contrary in the past. Their memories are short when they summon them to believe what they do not want to understand. They perhaps have forgotten all about the dissipation of the big treasury surplus that they made, leaving an empty teasury to the Democrats whom their mismanagement put into power.

And while we are yet at the beginning of Democratic administration financial trouble darkens over the country as a result of its extravagance and dissipation; and Rupublican editors cry aloud. "See what Democratic ascendancy has brought about!"

They say it is as though they believed it, and perhaps they do; and they seem to have persuaded a good many voters to believe it. Astounding as it is that anyone should hold the Democratic party, now but eight months in power, responsible for a condition of business that is clearly the consequence of years of misdoing, yet it is evident that many voters have voted under this idea and that the Democracy have suffered because of the clear sins of the Republican party when it held power.

And not only has this come to pass, but the sponsor of the existing tariff bill, which is justly held accountable for the business disturbance, has been elected by the people of his state, on the direct issue of the wisdom of that law. So that it happens that the tariff law we now have seems to be approved by the people of Ohio, notwithstanding the business distress; which they not only fail to charge to the existing law, but are said to attribute to their apprehension of the law which the new Democratic Congress is expected to enact; and which law is, therefore, condemned before it is enacted. The business distress of the country is charged upon something that not only has not even been formulated into a bill, on its way to be made into a law. Of course this is nonsense; of course the Democratic party is in no way responsible for the present business situation, though it be the result of tariff agitation.

But we are forced to say that the Republican editors have but taken the cue from Democratic orators, in charging the financial distress upon general apprehension instead of upon the facts. A section of Democratic statesmen have been for months insisting, with a section of Republican statement, upon declaring that our business troubles came from the silver coinage; that the people believed this; and that their fears were to be respected and the purchase of silver to be stopped, that prosperity might promptly set in.

They stopped it and prosperity did not set in. Then the Republican orators seized upon the people's fear of the Democratic tariff as the reason; and they played sharply on this note for the week before the election, that seems to have been much moved by the music.

They tell us that good times are surely coming. And so, doubtless, they will in time. Time is all that is needed for our cure. The fellows that keep prophesying good times long enough will finally hit it. Meanwhile, to date, the signs of it are absent; and Republican victory and McKinley tariff has not been effective in hurrying up a process of business recuperation that will be necessarily slow, but is as necessarily certain to come, in its own good time.—Lanc. Intel.

COL. DAVY CROCKETT.

THE ROVING HERO AND HUNTER OF TENNESSEE AND TEXAS.

An English ship captain, whose craft was rolling and dipping monotonously at the Baltimore docks one fine spring day in the year 1800, noticed a roughly dressed lad from the backwoods idling about and staring big-eyed at the sights in the harbor. The place of cabin boy was vacant on the ship, and he asked the clever looking stranger, who had just entered his teens, if he would like a trip to London. The boy admitted that he didn't know where London was, but supposed it a part of the great world unknown to him, and said that anyway he would jump at the chance of swapping conditions with fate.

His wealth consisted of an extra suit of clothes and $7 in money, the proceeds of two years' hard labor as a drover's help on the track between east Tennessee and the seaboard. This little all was deposited in trust with a teamster, who as a chance road acquaintance had given him a ride on a load of flour from the valley of Virginia to Baltimore. He hunted up the wagon in the market place only to have his fond hopes crushed by the burly teamster, for the latter bluntly refused to surrender the valuables to their owner, and, furthermore—brandishing a heavy rawhide whip—swore that if the would-be runaway didn't stick to the wagon and go quietly back to his Tennessee home he would thrash him into submission.

Too well the helpless boy knew what that meant, for kicks and cuffs had been his portion ever since memory dawned upon him. He was a real runaway and had left his father's cabin in the Tennessee mountains to escape an expected thrashing for a deed that inevitably bore such sequel. For more than two years he had been buffeted about from drover to teamster and from teamster to drover, herding cattle from Tennessee east and choring for freight wagons on the return route. Often he had been lost in the wilderness and several times had barely escaped perishing in fierce winter storms. He now yielded sadly to the logic of events and the whip lash, thereby cheating the maritime world of another Paul Jones or London of another Dick Whittington, but saving to America her inimitable Davy Crockett, to Texas her immortal hero of the Alamo.

After many adventures he made an humble bow at the door of his father's mountain cabin, but, contrary to expectation, was treated like the original prodigal. If not a calf, a mountain fawn was slain and the thrashing with accrued interest omitted. Davy's mysterious absence had softened the old mountaineer, and he bargained to give his long lost son, who was then 16 years old, the balance of "his time" for $36, payable in farm labor. It took six months to wipe out the account and make the boy a free man.

Then, for the first time, the future congressman and popular speechmaker, who had never enjoyed a day's schooling and could neither read nor write, felt that a little learning would be an acquisition. But, as luck would have it, he fell in love. The stern father of the girl opposed the match successfully, and the lad persevered and found another backwoods goddess. That one jilted him on the eve of the bridal day, and he persevered and found a third nymph, whom he bore off in the good old Irish fashion of abduction, married, effected a reconciliation and settled down. The outfit of the young couple was a plow horse bought on credit and household utensils given or loaned by the bride's parents.

In the course of a few years the Crocketts moved three times onward into the ever lessening wilderness, and Davy grew to man's estate as a reputed pioneer and hunter. During the excitement caused by the Mims massacre he volunteered for the Creek war and came in contact with a new force, the mysterious entity called government. His first encounter with it foreshadowed his later conduct. The little Tennessee army, commanded by a major, advanced to the Tennessee river to invade the Creek country. The region swarmed with hostiles, vigilant and bloodthirsty. Before crossing the river into the jaws of death it was thought best to reconnoiter the ground, and Davy's captain pointed him out as a suitable man to be one of 13 advance guards. He eagerly consented to go and asked to have for his companion a beardless youth named George Russell.

"I called him up," wrote Crockett in his biography. "but the major said he hadn't beard enough to please him. He wanted men, not boys. I was nettled at this, for I knowed George Russell, and I knowed there was no mistake in him, and I didn't think that courage ought to be measured by the beard for fear a goat would have the preference over a man. I told the major he was on the wrong scent; that Russell could go as far as he could, and I must have him along. He saw I was a little wrathy, and said I had the best chance of knowing, and agreed that it should be as I wanted it."

The bold scouts crossed the river and soon divided, the major leading one party and Crockett the other. One night Crockett's band fell in with a village of Cherokees who desired to be neutral in the war between Creeks and whites and asked through an interpreter that the scouts withdraw for fear the Creeks would come down on them and massacre all alike. Crockett, half asleep, rolled over in his blanket and said: "Tell the Cherokees that I will keep a sharp lookout and if a single Creek comes near the camp to-night I will carry the skin of his head home to make me a moccasin."

At that the Cherokees laughed and turned in. A little later on a Cherokee runner arrived with the news that 1,000 Creeks were on the warpath, marching to ambush General Jackson's army at the crossing of the Coosa. Crockett immediately aroused his band and set out for Jackson's camp. To his amazement, Jackson's lieutenant, Colonel Coffee, refused to credit the story coming from a coarse backwoods private and took no steps to meet the crisis.

"I was so mad," wrote Crockett, "that I was burning inside like a tar kiln, and I wonder the smoke had not been pouring out of me at all points." Fortunately the next day the major got in with his party, confirming the terrible news. "This," said Crockett, "seemed to put our colonel all in a fidget, and it convinced me clearly of one of the hateful ways of the world. I was not believed because I was no officer—just a poor soldier. But when the same thing was reported by the major—why, then it was all true as preaching, and the colonel believed every word."

Yet, in spite of the chilling rebuffs to his enthusiasm, Crockett fought through the campaign a daring and magnanimous warrior. When the starving soldiers were huddled in a close column for greater protection, he penetrated the forest alone in search of game, which he nobly shared with those in deepest need. Not infrequently the officers who had despised his judgment fed off his bounty. The war over, he returned home and soon buried the wife so romantically won in his youth.

He remarried and again set his face westward, bringing up in the wilderness of southern Tennessee. There, and in a still newer settlement in western Tennesssee, he won great fame as a pioneer hunter and story teller. He was a justice and legislator by turns before he knew the meaning of the words judiciary and government, acquired property which he lost by a flood, and 1826, at the age of 40, was elected to congress as a Jacksonian supporter. He served two terms.

Although maintaining and apparently glorying in a reputation for buffoonery, Crockett was a man of sound practical sense, if not of moral sentiments. His favorite axiom, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead," has guided many a soul through the maelstrom of doubt. He was all things on all occasions. When on his way to Washington, a rude fellow traveler jostled him with a challenging party yell and ended by demanding, "Who are you?"

His answer was an unpremeditated volley of border slang. "I am that same Davy Crockett," said he, "fresh from the backwoods, half horse, half alligator. I can wade the Mississippi, leap the Ohio, ride a streak of lightning and slip without a scratch down a honey locust. I can whip my weight in wildcats, and if any gentleman pleases for a $10 bill he may throw in a panther. I can hug a bear too close for his comfort and eat any man opposed to general Jackson."

In Washington at the sound of the party lash he declared, "I am at liberty to vote as my conscience and judgment dictate to be right." His independence is said to have cost him his seat, but the loss did not sour his spirit. He was given a flattering reception on a journey through the east and proved that his four years in congress had expanded his mind and tempered his judgment. In a public speech at Boston he deprecated the harsh western opinions of eastern people and said: "I shall never repent having come here to get a knowledge of your ways, which I can carry home with me. I want to do away with prejudice and give the people information."

On his rejection for a third term in congress the irrepressible pioneer again pulled up his cabin stakes to seek a new field for his talents. Some farewell lines written over the event are as pathetic and lofty as the sentiments the great poet Schiller puts on the lips of Joan of Arc when she quits her native valley to march forth to war. After reciting tender memories of the mountains, the fields and flocks and herds, the cabin and children—some living, some dead—and "the wife of my bosom," Crockett's verses conclude:

Farewell to ye all!
In the land of the stranger I rise or I fall.

Farewell to my country! I fought for thee well
When the savage rushed forth like the demons from hell.

In peace or in war I have stood by thy side—
My country, for thee I have lived, would have died.

But I am cast off, my career now is run,
And I wander abroad like the prodigal son.
Where the wild savage roves and the broad prairies spread,
The fallen—despised—will again go ahead.

It was a strange fate that took Davy Crockett to martyrdom in the Alamo. Around him mustered four acquaintances picked up on the journey across the plains—an ex-pirate of the gulf, an Indian, a romantic young bee hunter who was to die in battle singing of the girl he had left behind (Kate of Nacogdoches) and a gambler whom he had reformed by a caustic exhortation to redeem his vile past by a noble death.

In the old mission house of the Alamo Travis' beleaguered few were praying for re-inforcements, and Crockett's arrival through the Mexican lines was hailed as a godsend. One morning during the bombardment, with his unerring "Betsy"—the rifle that was his pride—he shot down one after another five Mexican gunners before they could apply the match, and their comrades abandoned the piece in terror. Again with the bee hunter and two others he sallied out of the fort to rescue the pirate who was returning with a message from a distant fortress and had been cut off by 20 Mexicans.

The rescue party was speedily surrounded. Crockett, clubbing his rifle, cried out, "Go ahead!" and dashed into the enemy. They cut their way back to the fort, leaving eight dead Mexicans to mark their pathway. but the pirate and the bee hunter got their death wounds in the struggle. Crockett lived to fight heroically in resisting the massacre that followed the surrender and was cut down by a dozen Mexican sabres as he sprang like a panther at the throat of Santa Anna, who ordered the fiendish butchery.
GEORGE L. KILMER.

A CHICAGO clergyman having performed the marriage ceremony for a couple undertook to write out the usual marriage certificate; but being in doubt as to the day of the month, he asked:

"This is the ninth, is it not?"

"Why," parson, said the blushing bride, "you do all my marrying, and you ought to remember that this is only the fifth."

"ARE you still taking painting lessons, Mamie?"

"No; I left off yesterday. I don't like my teacher."

"Why not?"

"He has such a disagreeable way of talking. He told me that if I kept on for some time longer I might be able to whitewash a fence."

HORRORS OF BATTLE.

THE STORY OF GETTYSBURG TOLD BY A FARMER.

From Washington Star, Nov. 4, 1893.

If the visitor to this memorable spot will turn to the left from the Baltimore pike at the Cemetery gate, and following the lines well marked by monuments, field pieces, and intrenchment, &c., over Culp's Hill, around the bend or angle, up past the monument to the confederate dead of a Maryland regiment, down past Spangler's spring and then out west across the low ground and a little creek, along a country road for half a mile, and will then turn to the right across the fields to a somewhat conspicuous granite monument on the Baltimore pike again, he will have traversed half, or, at any rate, a distinct part of the field of this most momentous of American battles.

The stone informs him that here were Gen. Slocum's headquarters. This area, lying to the east of Cemetery Ridge, has in some sense a history of its own, quite distinct from that which transpired west of the ridge, and is crowded with scenes of thrilling interest and deadly struggle, only surpassed, if, indeed, surpassed, by "Death's Valley" and the "Bloody Angle." Across the road from the monument, and a few rods further down, stands now and stood then a two-story stone farm-house, the home of Nathaniel Lightner, a carpenter-farmer, whom I found mending a hay-rack, and from whom I elicited the following story of experiences that seem to me well worthy of appearing in print. Farmer Lightner is as honest as he is modest in his use of words, and will not allow that this is a story, but "facts, real facts."

Said he: "I and my neighbor, John Tawney, set in to mow my meadow back of the orchard there on that morning, July 1, 1863. It was a hot, sultry morning, and after we had mowed awhile Tawney says: 'I could do this better if I had a little whisky to drink.' 'I can soon get you some,' I replied, and taking a jug set off to the village to get some. On the way I fell in with Wm. Young, another neighbor. When we got on top of Cemetery Hill we saw a long line of smoke from campfires over north, along the Chambersburg pike, the first we knew of the soldiers being about. We soon met people who said they thought there was going to be fighting out there. When we got into town everybody was talking about it, and said it looked like something was going on out there. But they had not a suspicion of the flood of bloody war that would roll through their streets and up into their doorways and gardens before the day was past. It was about 9 o'clock. Young said, 'Let's go out on Seminary road and see what there is out there, anyway.' When we got up on the hill we saw down to our left Union soldiers, the First corps, coming across the fields from the Emmitsburg road. We stood there watching them move up, form lines and take position under the hill. Directly a shell came whizzing over from the front, and fell back toward town. Young wanted to go, but I insisted on staying a little longer. There was a great stir and commotion among the soldiers at once, and they soon began to move forward. The shells began to come pretty thick, and we left.

"We had not got half-way back to town when we met other Union troops pouring along the road and through the fields, coming out of every street and alley and open space of the town, all rushing, pell-mell, forward, without any apparent order, with fixed bayonets, eager-eyed, stripped, sweating and panting in the hot sun. They cursed us for being in the way, butted us back, and would have run right over us if we had not dodged out of their way. We crawled through among them as well as we could, dodging behind posts and buildings, and gaining a run of a few rods whenever we could. We got separated, and I don't know how Young got home. A mad rush of more troops, wagons and ambulances followed filling up streets, orchards, fields and every place. I did not get home till 4 o'clock, trying with all my might all day. As I came down the pike home I saw a red flag on the end of the house, and when I got nearer saw the yard full of soldiers.

"Under an apple tree I found the surgeons with a man stretched out on our dining room table, cutting and sawing a leg off, and on the grass there lay a pile of limbs. I went around to the kitchen door and looked in. The floor was covered with wounded men. The stove was red hot, and they were baking and cooking up everything in the house. They had taken full possession. My four barrels of flour and everything in the cellar and spring house were soon used up. The family had taken refuge in the shop where I found them frightened and crying. They had got nothing out of the house, and did not know what had become of me.

"I went back to the surgeon and asked him what I should do. 'Do you live here?' Is this your place?' he asked. I told him it was. 'Go back; go back; take your family and go to the rear; that is all I can tell you,' said he, and went on with his work. 'Can't I get some clothing, at least, out of the house?' I asked. 'If you can find any,' said he. I went in, but could not find a thing that had not been torn up and put to use—not even a dress of my wife.

"We set out with the children, six in number, from thirteen years down, and made our way back, on foot, as well as we could, among the oncoming troops and trains, four miles to a relation's, where I left them, and returned about midnight to the neighborhood. I crawled into the garret of Tawney's house for fear of the Confederate scouts and sharpshooters, and about day-break slipped out, and over through the bushes to Power's Hill, up there on the corner of my land. There I found the signal corps had established headquarters. From there I could look down on my place and see what was going on. I found Rufus Culp there, and told him I was hungry; had had nothing to eat since the morning before. He got some hardtack for me. They had planted a battery below, to drive some sharpshooters off Culp's Hill, and were cutting down my timber. My wheatfield and orchard were full of wagon trains. A drove of beef cattle was being herded in the meadow.

"I saw I could save nothing, so went back and moved the family nine miles further away, and came back and stayed with the signal corps till the battle was over.

"On the third day after the battle I got down to the house. There was not a board or rail of fencing left on the place. Not a chicken, pig, cow or dog to be found. The mules had eaten up the orchard of four-year-old trees, down to the stalks. The garden was full of bottles and camp litter; the meadow of the hides and offal of the beeves which had been shot down in their tracks and dressed on the spot, as meat was needed. There stood the bare shop, the house full of wounded men, and the old barn, where Gen. Slocum had made his headquarters. In front of the barn sat a weary-looking, lone officer, in blouse coat, drying himself at a fire made of pieces of rails. That officer was Maj. Gen. Slocum himself. Not an orderly was in sight. He looked dreary enough.

"I found Col. Bebel in charge of the house and asked him when he thought I could get my house back. He said he had no idea when. We came back, about a week later, and lived, gipsy-like, in the shop for six weeks. The officers supplied us for a few days from the hospital stores.

"Such smells as came from the festering wounds, from the blood and medicines, stained floors and from the chloroform! Then the stench from the slaughter yard in the meadow became sickening. Blue-bottle flies swarmed on the walls of the shop and house of an evening, and the night air was terrible. Why did we stay? Why come back? What else could we do? We had no money to pay board, we had nothing, and a large family to care for. We had been putting all our money into the place. We must set to work as fast as we could to fix it up and get ready for the winter.

"Six weeks later they took the last of the wounded away and let us have the house. We tried to clean it up and live in it, but it made us all sick. Toward spring I got a chance to take a stocked farm on shares, so I moved away and let the house to an old Dutchman, who did not seem to mind the smells. Nine years afterward I tore all the woodwork and plaster out and made the house new from the bare walls. Then we came back, but my poor wife did not live long in our new home. She had never been well from that first time we tried to live in it.

"War is awful," said old Mr. Lightner. "Everything suffers in war; people all suffer, animals suffer, the plants suffer and droop and die; the little birds are killed or are frightened away from their nests and their young; the trees are torn by shot and shell or are cut down ruthlessly for fires and breastworks; grain and grass are eaten up or trodden into the ground in an hour. Springs and wells are the soldiers' boons, and are supped up to the last drop. The water even of that dirty, bloody creek over there, where thousands of cavalry and artillery horses were watered, was greedily used by the soldiers. War is all suffering. Why, over there, back of Powers' Hill, the supply trains of some New York regiments and batteries were packed in a field. The mules stood in harness, without food or water, for three days and two nights of the battle, ready to move at a moment's notice. The mules and drivers were more like dead than living things. Over beyond the 'Bloody Angle' I saw, on Sunday after the battle, six mules dead, in harness to a Confederate gun with not a spoke left in the wheels, all done by a shell. Pieces of men and animals lay scattered about everywhere. Over in Culp's Hill I saw the Union soldiers burying Confederate soldiers in trenches thirty or forty feet long and only a few feet deep. They piled them in like cord wood.

"Then, too, the government arrested me. I must tell you about that. A man came along from New York a few days after the battle and told the children he would buy any relics they could pick up. They got together some bullets, buckles, canteens and the like, and when he came back I dickered with him for them and sold him $2 or $3 worth of things. Soon after a Col. Blood came down to gather up government property and he had me arrested. I told him how it was, that we had no idea of doing anything unlawful; but he was determined to make me all the trouble he could. He put me to considerable expense, but my neighbors got me off after a few days. That arrest is the only thing of it all that made me mad, and I am mad about that yet."

Seeking a Divorce.

He came into the office of one of our leading attorneys and plunged dejectedly down into a chair.

"Say," he began, "are you a tip-top lawyer? Never fail in a case?"

"I try to be," was the lawyer's modest reply. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to get a divorce."

"Have you sufficient reason for separation?"

"You just bet I have."

"Well, kindly tell me your troubles and I will let you have my opinion."

"Five years ago I married a country girl because I thought I'd get a sensible one. Got that down?"

"Yes."

"Well, things went nicely for two years, then came the rub."

"Yes."

"The first thing she did was to go and buy a lot of Bertha M. Clay's love-sick novels to find out how society in London was carried on."

"Yes."

"I didn't mind that, but after she had nosed around a bit she began to get her high falutin' ideas."

"Yes."

"Well, she commenced with makin' me get two servants. Then she made us have breakfast off the mantelpice—that is, get up an' help yourself."

"Yes."

"Then she made me belong to three or four clubs an' made it hot for me if I came home earlier than 1 o'clock. Got that?"

"Yes."

"Next, she made the servants call her milady. But she capped the climax by sayin' one day that she was sufferin' from enwe. I went to a doctor an' asked him what the duce that was, an' he told me it was French for that tired feeling. That settled it. From then on it was enwe, an' enter nong, an' bullyung, an' soloong, an' parley voo, an'—well, then she went in for music. She called Wagner 'Vogner,' Liszt 'Leest,' an' ended the whole business by calling me her charmangie. Say, don't you think you could fix it up right off, before she takes to runnin' for school commissioner."

The lawyer smiled a sad smile.

"I'm afraid you can't get a divorce on these things. Will you pay your $10 for my opinion now, or shall I send in my bill?"

And the other took out ten silver circles, and went over to the police station and asked for a night's lodging.

WHEN THE CLOCK STRIKES 13.

Life will be a swelling anthem, with no discord in the tune,
In the dim and rainbowed distance of some thirty-first of June;
Then we'll find the happy valleys dressed in everlasting green,
Skied with rich, purpureal splendor—when our old clock strikes thirteen.

We shall glide through halcyon waters, with no laboring oar to pull,
When the morning sun is setting and the bright new moon is full;
Bask in fair irriguous meadows lapped in satisfying rest,
When the polar star is shining at the threshold of the west.

We shall find the enchanted islands—they are resting over there,
Where the square peg fits the round hole, and the round peg fits the square;
They are resting in the center of the world's third hemisphere—
When to-day shall catch to-morrow we shall find them, never fear.

Swathed in Hesperidean hazes on the mystic sea they rest,
'Twixt the North pole and the South pole, just between the east and west;
Let us bravely go to seek them, put our bold prows out to sea;
All we've got to do to find them is to go just where they be.

Then we'll hear life's swelling anthem with no discord in the tune,
And we'll pluck time's full fruition on that thirty-first of June,
And we'll till those happy valleys, dressed in everlasting green,
Skied with rich purpureal splendor—when our old clock strikes thirteen.

The Lessons of the Fair.

WHAT IT HAS TAUGHT THE PEOPLE OF THE NATIONS AND THE WORLD —A PHILOSOPHIC VIEW.

Everyone agrees that in all the elements that make a great exposition a success, the World's Columbian Exposition has excelled all others. In the number, magnitude and magnificence of its buildings, the profusion and variety of its exhibits, their uses, beauty and costliness, and in the throngs that have visited them, it leads in the long list of international expositions held since the gates of the first were opened in London over 40 years ago.

Promising this much there follows the question: "Of what use was it? What good has it done?" This can only be answered by endeavoring to point out its effects upon the people who visited it. The new ideas, thoughts, enlightenment and entertainment gained by the individual are as numerous as the individuals themselves, for no two persons saw it from the same point of view or were identically impressed by its wonders. It is only the general results that can be estimated, and those but measureably. First, it has given an added impetus to the desire to travel among other people in other communities. This is a spur to progress, for the man who stays at home, content with whatever its limited circle affords, naturally contracts in his ideas, views and ambitions.

The war of the Rebellion, as many observer have already noted, was the first great impetus to travel in this country.

During those four eventful years the young men of the Nation, on both sides in the contest, left homes they might otherwise never have wandered from, and saw the United States in many different sections and our civilization in its varied phases. This weakened the ties that bound them to their birth places. The Western States have been built up, and the new ones that have been organized owe their development and progress largely to the soldiers who lived to return from the war in 1865.

Eleven years later came the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876. This set the people to traveling, although on peaceful errands, and as not only men, but women and children, were among the visiting hosts, it had a better and a deeper influence. None can measure the results of the Centennial Exposition as manifested in a broader culture, extended thought and more artistic development among Americans. It helped too to strengthen and build up a feeling of civic pride, a solidarity of the people. Nothing did more to bind up the wounds of the war than the Exposition of 1876.

Since that time, now 17 years ago, the nation has grown and the effects of that exposition has been manifested in that growth. And the times were ripe for such a magnificent World's Fair as that just closed. On the same lines, but to a far greater extent, has it had its effect upon the people. Great as was the stirring up to travel given by the war and the Philadelphia Exposition, this has given a greater, and the means of going from one section to another have been advanced to the highest pitch of perfection. It has not drawn its visitors so largely from certain localities as did the Centennial, located practically on the Atlantic coast. Midway between Atlantic and the Rocky Mountians, it has brought the East and the West together, the Pacific coast, even, for it is now not a much greater journey from San Francisco to Chicago than it was from the Mississippi to Philadelphia in 1876. The people of the South and Southwest, now recovered from the losses of the war, have had both money, leisure and inclination to come here. In 1876 they were still embittered by defeat, impoverished by four years of fruitless, costly struggle. But this year the South has sent to Chicago, to the State of Lincoln and Grant, in the very heart of what she regarded then as the hostile North, tens of thousands of her best citizens.

Thus the people of all sections have been brought together on a common meeting ground. And this is the second beneficial effect of the Chicago Exposition. Men and women have learned more than they ever knew before of their brothers or sisters in every part of the Union. They have seen their products, their industries, their progress in every field of industrial, educational and social advancement. They have learned that communities far distant from theirs have equaled, perhaps in some directions excelled, them in this march of progress. The wonderful diversification of our industries, and the varieties and vastness of our products have been laid before them, and they have learned, if they never knew it before, that energy and enterprise and wealth are confined to no favored few localities, but are conquering everywhere. The man who left the World's Fair, if he had observed anything at all outside of the Midway Plaisance, must be a poor American indeed if he did not leave it with a broader and better idea of the Republic and its people than he had ever had before. Nay, even the strange peoples gathered on the Plaisance, their habits and customs and place in the scale of civilization must have made him prouder of the conquests achieved over savage life in our land.

And then, taking the exhibits themselves, who can tell the impressions they made, the new ideas they gave or suggested? Leaving out those that represent industral power alone, the mighty machines, the inventions and discoveries in every branch of mechanical industry, and regarding solely those that appeal to the esthetic side of man's being. how much has been done! Magnificence and splender have their uses. And both were here. The buildings have awakened wonder and admiration in thousands who never before had the opportunity of viewing such dreams of architectural beauty. Now a hitherto almost unknown delight has been opened to them. In the numberless articles of household adornment, furniture, glasses, fine pottery ware, brasses, bronzes, tapestry, carpets, there have been given glimpses of beauty and artistic advancement such as millions had not known before.

The Art Gallery, with its multitude of pictures, a collection such as no people have ever before had the opportunity of gazing upon under one roof, has filled the minds of tens of thousands with impressions and ideals to which they had hitherto been strangers. The creations of the painter's art that hung upon those walls, the sculptured forms that graced the rotundas, opened up a new world to the throngs that daily gazed upon them, and have planted the seeds of a taste for art in its highest forms that must bear fruit of future culture and power. From the generation that has admired these works of painter and sculptor will spring a generation that shall create.

All this and infinitely more, the World's Columbian Exposition has done and in the future will do, for the American people. And greater than its greatness, more magnificent than its magnificence, must be the results it will accomplish for this favored land wherein it was held.—Pittsburg Times.

AN ENGLISH TRADITION.—There is a large bowlder lying in a field near Foremark, England, which is known throughout Derbyshire as "Hangman's Stone." The exposed portion of the bowlder rises about six feet above the surface of the surrounding field and has a narrow ditch or indentation running across the top. The mark, so tradition says, was made in this way: A sheep thief in the dead of night, while leaning against the bowlder to rest, placed his booty above on the flat surface of the stone. The man had the sheep tied with a rope and in its effort to escape the creature slipped on the opposite side, and the rope catching under the thief's chin choked him to death. The indentation in the rock was made by the friction of the rope while the dying man was engaged in an effort to extricate himself.

CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER CASES.—Miss Daisy Uppercrust (to maid). "Molly, I heard somebody kiss you in the dark hall last night."

Maid. "Well, you get kissed, too, don't you?"

"Yes: but I am kissed by the young man to whom I am engaged to be married. There is no harm in that."

"I'm glad to know it. He is the same young man you heard kissing me in the hall last night."

HE was a countryman, and he walked along a busy thoroughfare and read a sign over the door of a manufacturing establishment, "Cast Iron Sinks." It made him mad. He said that any fool ought to know that.

HE—"This is the first opportunity I have had of being alone with you. Now, what ought a fellow do when an opportunity like this presents itself?"

She—(promptly). "I think he should embrace it."

SMALL BOY—"Mamma, isn't it all right to throw rice after a bride and groom?"

Mamma—"Certainly; why do you ask?"

Small Boy—"'Cause my new brother-in-law said he was going to lick me when he came home from the honeymoon, 'cause I soaked him in the ear with a hunk of soft boiled rice."

THE ASTRONOMERS.—Our most eminent astronomers do not pretend to give us exact reckonings on the great floating worlds outside of our own solar system, but within that monstrous aggregation everything has been reduced to certainty. The king pin of the solar system is Jupiter, 'mighty Jupiter, the colossal giant of all the sun-kissed worlds." His diameter is about 88,000 of our miles, being about eleven times that of our own globe; the circumference 275,000 miles at the equator, which would give the giant a volume exceeding that of the earth by 1 284 times. Were it possible to bring the earth and Jupiter so close together that the distance separating them would be no greater than that which now separates the earth from the moon—about 240 000 miles—what a wondrous sight would be in store for the residents of our little globe. The world of Jupiter would appear to us to have a diameter forty times larger than that of our moon. mighty attendant, and the surface of his disk would occupy a space greater than that of 1 600 full moons. And this giant of the planets is removed from the sun by a distance of 496 000 000 miles; has an orbit of more than 1 000,000 000 miles in extent, and makes a circuit of its celestial track once every 4 332 days. Thus it will be seen that a year on Jupiter is equal to eleven years ten months and seventeen days on our globe. The immensity of the world of Jupiter and its orbit may be approximately measured by this comparison: In order to complete its orbit in the time given above, it must speed around the sun with the velocity of 700,000 miles a day, or a little more than eight miles per second.

Gettysburg, Tuesday, Nov. 21, 1893.

DEMOCRATIC State Chairman J. Marshall Wright has removed headquarters to Allentown. He is hopeful of the future.

IT is the intention to present the Pennsylvania State exhibit of minerals, chemicals, etc, at the World's Fair to the State College.

IT is authoritatively stated that President Cleveland will not sign any Silver bill passed by the Fifty-third Congress. The President is opposed to the United States continuing the coinage of silver when other powers with which this country has close and constant financial relations have practically discontinued the use of the white metal.

THE condition of Col. A. K. McClure, of the Philadelphia Times, continues favorable, though very slow, and there is no obstacle now apparent in the way of his gradual recovery.

THE political axe has begun to fall on the necks of the Federal officeholders in Philadelphia, and their heads to roll into the basket that stands ready to receive them. Thomas V. Cooper, Collector of the Port, was the first to fall under the hands of the executioner, and John R. Read has been appointed his successor.

FROM official sources in the Pension Bureau it is learned that great pension frauds have been perpetrated in Buffalo, N. Y., whereby $150,000 have already been wrongfully paid to applicants.

THE Agricultural Department is making an exhaustive inquiry into road improvements and it is expected an attempt will be made at the approaching session of Congress to secure legislation looking to a general improvement of roads.

J. SCOTT HARRISON, the new Surveyor of Customs for the port of Kansas City, is the Democratic brother of ex-President Harrison. He has been an active Democratic politician.

THE Columbia, the great war ship, made 22.87 knots, and on a spurt the remarkable speed of 25.31, making it the Greyhound of war. The builders win $350,000 by the official test.

AND now, while the representatives of the enduring great republic and of the provisional little oligarchy are fixing up matters in Hawaii satisfactorily to all concerned, will not our excited fellow-citizens of the jingo press and the political trick-ring kindly give the people a rest?—*N. An Aimless Stampede.

It is interesting, if not amusing, to read the newspaper comments on the result of the recent election. The Republican papers furnish the most of this entertainment. Among these the New York Tribune, with an air of great wisdom, declares that the result "admonishes the Democratic party that its purposes and practices are resented by the people."

It would be difficult for the Tribune to show what purposes the Democratic party entertains at this time that were not entertained by it a year ago when the people sustained it by an immense majority, and directed it to proceed with what it proposed to do. It declared that one of its purposes was to reform the tariff, an intention which received a most ample endorsement from the popular vote. Is it likely that the people this year rebuked a purpose which last year they endorsed with such a decided preponderance of their approval, and rebuked it, too, before the Democratic party had an opportunity to act in the matter with which it was entrusted by the popular voice? As that party has not yet had time to give practical shape to its purposes there is a decided shade of absurdity in the New York organ's declaration that the "practices" of the Democratic party are resented by the people.

About a year after this the Republican organs will be able to speak with more intelligence and less nonsense, about what the people think of the "practices" of the party in power. By that time its purposes will have been put in practice and will be judged by their merits. The election this year was merely a wild and aimless stampede, such as is likely to occur at a period of business depression, but from which there is always a speedy recovery when the times improve.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17, 1893.

Editor of Compiler: The fool-killer ought to have been in Washington this week. He might have worked twenty-four hours every day without completing his job. Although there is no cable to Hawaii and no possible way that any news could have been received from there since that which reached here by telegraph from San Francisco on Monday, and that which came to the State department from Minister Willis has not been made public, the town has been full of stories giving details of what had or had not been done there. They are all alike—mere guesswork, and a majority of them are but stupid guesses. No one in Washington knows to a certainty whether the provisional government of Hawaii has retired in favor of the Queen who was, last January, by the action of Minister Stevens in ordering a force of United States marines ashore, bulldozed into abdicating in favor of said provisional government, although those who have seen the communication of Minister Stevens could doubtless make a guess that would be very near to the facts. A good many of those who went off half-cocked, as the saying goes, when Secretary Gresham's report recommending that the wrong done by Minister Stevens should be righted by the present administration was made public are now sorry did not do more thinking and less talking. A man cannot be a good juror who would decide upon his verdict as soon as the testimony of one witness is heard. Only one witness has been heard in this Hawaiian business yet. When all the evidence which is in the possession of the administration shall have been made public, as it all will be in due time, no Democrat will have any reason to blush for the verdict of the people, but some Republicans who have been prominent may blush for shame, if they have not forgotten how.

President Cleveland must feel like asking himself sometimes whether a man forfeits all the rights he is supposed to have as a citizen when he becomes President. When he does not advertise his intentions in the newspapers were not informed before hand that the family of the President was to move this week from their suburban residence to the White House that simple domestic event was heralded to the country as a sudden and mysterious change of plans on the part of the President, and a lot of fool-reasons given to account for it. After seeing his family settled in the White House the President committed the heinous crime of going to New York in company with Secretary Lamont to attend to some pressing private business, without telling the newspaper men about it. As soon as they found he was gone they made the wires hot with stories about his having gone to New York for the purpose of having a dangerous surgical operation performed, etc. Now, could anything have been more absurd? How probable it seems that a man having two comfortable homes in Washington where he could have the constant attention of a loving wife would prefer to go to New York for a surgeon, if he had need of one, instead of having the surgeon come to him at his home. President Cleveland is back at his desk and there is nothing the matter with him, except that he believes he has the right to regulate his private affairs to suit himself; but some people seem to think that a serious complaint.

It is now considered probable that the new tariff bill will be completed in about ten days. There is a possibility, however, that it may not be made bublic until after Congress meets, as there is quite a strong feeling among democratic members of the House that it will save time, not to mention annoyance and bickerings, to have the new bill submitted and approved by a democratic caucus before it is reported to the House. Those who take this view of the matter argue that it will not be good politics to have democratic fighting for changes in the bill on the floor of the House, and that if changes are to be made or asked for it should all be done in caucus. This appears to be good logic, but there are a number of prominent democrats who are opposed to caucusing on the bill. It strikes your correspondent that the democratic party would be the gainer if its representatives in both the House and the Senate would caucus upon every important measure that it is to come before Congress. There never was a time when the necessity was greater for presenting a solid front to the enemy; there was too much guerrilla fighting at the extra session for the good of the party.

Owing to the time of the President being taken up with his message to Congress and that of the members of the cabinet with their annual reports, their will probably be very few appointments made until after Congress meets. DEM.

Matters to Consider.

For our part, says the Watchman, we can't see much in the late election, showing a condemnation of the proposed reforms Democrats are expected to carry out. At least the number of votes cast for the Republican ticket, as compared with that cast a year ago, don't prove anything of the kind. In Pennsylvania alone where the Republican majority runs up to 135,000 there is 73,000 votes less for the high tariff party than there was this time twelve months ago. Does this look as if the people were aroused on the tariff question? Does it look like the triumph of a principle in which everybody is interested? Not much. That there was something wrong with the voter who didn't come out is true. That they wanted the tariff to remain as it is is not true or they would have gone to the election, as begged to do by the Republicans, and voted that way. The reason for the stay at home vote will be found in lesser matters than the great reforms voted for last fall.

News in General.

The English coast was littered with debris from scores of ships, caused by a blinding snow storm last Saturday. Nearly 500 lives have been lost and the extent of damage to vessels and coast cannot be determined by the unparalled storm.

The strike in the Wilkesbarre lace mill, one of the largest in the country, which lasted for some months past, may be considered ended. The large force of Germans will be taken back. This strike was looked upon as ill-advised and unreasonable at the time.

I HAVE been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep and had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

Only the Scars Remain.

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc.," writes HENRY HUDSON, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., "none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old mother urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

THE FENCE QUESTION SOLVED

—BY—

Will make over 20 Different Styles of

Woven Wire Fencing

and also a Slat and Wire Fence.

The Greatest Invention of the Age.

Heretofore, WOVEN WIRE FENCING has been a luxury, the price being so high that only the wealthy could afford to buy it. This Machine brings it within the reach of all—so low, indeed, that it will not pay to waste money on any other kind of fence. This is the only Machine on earth that you can take into the field and make a woven wire fence. A man to work the Machine and a boy to spool the mesh wire, can make and put on the posts from 40 to 50 rods per day. Over TWENTY different styles of fence can be made on this Machine. IT IS VERY SIMPLE AND DOES NOT REQUIRE A SKILLED PERSON TO RUN IT. The fence can be made light for yard or lawn, or if for a farm, and is desired, can be made strong enough to stand a breaking strain of 10,000 pounds. It takes up but little room, and is fire and wind proof. IT IS THE COMING FENCE. For prices or other information apply to or address

OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

THE undersigned, Executors of JOHN DIEHL, late of the borough of Littlestown, Adams county, Pa., deceased, offer at Private Sale,

THAT HIGHLY IMPROVED FARM of said decedent, situate in Union township, Adams county, Pa., containing 210 ACRES, more or less. There is on the premises a fine large Two-story BRICK BUILDING with Back-building and an excellent cellar under the entire house; there is also an excellent Brick Barn on the premises, 100 feet long and 55 feet wide, a good large Wagon Shed and a Shed for agricultural implements, 27 feet long, good Smoke House, Hog Pen, Carriage House, Chicken House, Ice House and Wood Shed. These buildings are all in good repair and conveniently situated. There is a well of water and a spring very convenient to the house and an excellent spring near the barn. There are 2 Orchards on the premises, the one in which the trees are young and now commencing to bear. There is an abundance of other fruit on the premises, pears, cherries, peaches and grapes. Indeed there will be found on the place all that could be desired on a first-class farm. There are on the place between 40 and 50 acres of most excellent Wood Land, and an abundance of good Limestone. The land is in first-rate condition and the location very desirable, being convenient to churches, schools and mills, and is situated on the public road leading from Littlestown to Conowago Chapel, midway between these two points.

The premises will be shown at any time by Jeremiah Frock residing thereon.

There are Many Heaters

That are GOOD.

For a year or two they may and undoubtedly do work as well as is their capacity to do so, and then for a year they will work by fits and starts; the next year, after expending the price of the best heater in repairs and attempts that are hopelessly futile, the old heater is reluctantly consigned to the ash-heap, and the best—a "Florida"—introduced.

Then, come praises; come regrets that the merits of the "Florida" were not before known.

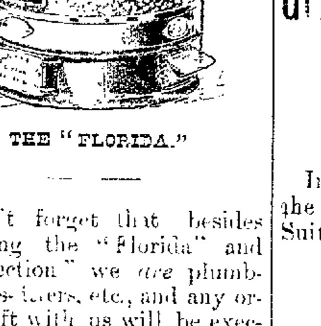

There is But One Heater

That is BEST,

And it is "The Florida." We have put it in the residences of many citizens of Gettysburg and Adams County, and praise, joy, comfort and health follows in its wake.

If you are dissatisfied with your source of heat supply, we ask you to investigate the claims of the "Florida"—a heater that can be had in any desired size, burning hard or soft coal, heating by either steam or hot water.

A catalogue can be had for the asking.

THE "FLORIDA."

Don't forget that besides handling the "Florida" and "Perfection" we are plumbers, gas-fitters, etc., and any orders left with us will be executed in a workmanlike manner.

Grand Jury Report.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUDGES OF THE COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF ADAMS

We the Grand Jurors at the November Sessions 1893 respectfully submit to your Honorable Court the following report

We the Jury have passed upon eleven bills of indictment Ten we passed as true bills and ignored one

We have visited both the Jail and the Almshouse and inspected the buildings and various departments of both institutions thoroughly and find them well kept and in good condition with exceptions of the wall surrounding the Jail yard which is not satisfactory as it might be The officials of these Institutions deserve credit for the manner in which they are kept

We thank the Court and the District Attorney for their courtesy and assistance in the performance of our duties

Farm Matters

In successful swine feeding a pair of scales and a pencil are about as important as feed, yet how many feeders use either?

THE habit of eating mutton seems to be one which must be acquired, not because people have really a prejudice against the taste of good mutton, but because they do not know what it is — Indiana Farmer

THE fence law which works the greatest good to the greatest number is that which compels a man to fence his own cattle in, rather than to fence other people's out Where this is once tried it is not easy to persuade people to go back to the old way

THERE cannot be a thoroughly good farm unless there is a good water supply If your farm is wanting in this, spare no effort to correct it.

ALL feeding crops have two distinct values—their feeding and their manurial value The man who neglects the second will find in time that he has neglected the most important of the two, the one which has a direct effect in maintaining the prosperity of the farm

How many farmers have recently tested sheep raising on a mutton basis, so as to know whether it is profitable or not? It is quite natural for farmers to follow local prejudices in such matters and continue along in beaten paths

THE live stock is not much given to lying abed late in the morning This you can easily determine by visiting the barn about daylight Now, in the cold winter mornings do not let them stand for an hour or two impatiently waiting for their breakfast Feed them betimes, so that they can go right on with their business of laying on flesh

IT is a common practice to put some saltpetre in the pickle for preserving meats It has not itself any preservative quality, but it has the effect of hardening the surface of meats and thus preventing them from absorbing the excess of salt they are sure to take in when pickled in brine alone

THE dairy test at Chicago showed that, while some cows were capable of producing more milk and butter than others, the cost of the product for each cow also differed The cow that the farmer should have is not the "easy keeper," but the one that can eat a large quantity of food and convert it into milk and butter It matters not how much the cow eats, provided she produces correspondingly

GREEN food that has been preserved, such as ensilage, differs greatly from that which has been first dried and then steamed When the water is evaporated from grass there is a rearrangement of the particles, and no amount of water added afterward will restore it to its original condition The natural juices are solvents that cannot be replaced by any artificial methods Ensilage contains the juices of the plant at the time of harvesting, and is therefore, more easily digested than corn fodder that has been moistened or steamed

STRAW is not very valuable as food when fed alone, but cut straw and ground grain or a little oil meal added, makes a ration superior to either the straw or the grain

THE man who manages the dairy will sometimes complain of his failure to secure a profit and ascribe his lack of success to his stock when he is at fault in lacking knowledge of his business Years spent in following old methods are sometimes wasted It is the man who is not afraid to learn, and who does not 'know it all,' who succeeds

THE manure from a horse or cow, according to experiments made at Cornell University, is estimated at about eight cents per day, or $29 20 per year In estimating the receipts from each animal the value of the manure should be included and it may change a supposed loss into a profit, as the manure is as valuable as the crops

TRY irrigating a small plot next year, by way of experiment The windmill will supply the water It will, at least teach something, and may even lead to a revolution, especially in the cultivation of small fruits and vegetables

THE source of fertilizers are inexhaustible A few years ago the suggestion that a valuable fertilizer would be obtained from iron would have been received with doubt, but basic slag, one of the richest substances in phosphoric acid, is now derived from the iron furnace

If one-half of the manure that is annually spread on the corn land was used for grass, not only would the hay crop be much larger and the pastures last longer, but the land would be more rapidly improved and the profits from the farm would be larger

IT is impossible to estimate the weight of the food required by a comparison with the weight of the animal The dairy tests at Chicago demonstrated that size did not affect the quantity of food consumed Some of the Jerseys ate more food than the short horns, although the latter were much larger in size

IF all smutty corn is thrown out when the corn is being husked, and consigned to the fire, it will be of advantage Such corn can be used for fuel more economically than by attempting to utilize it in any other way, as the fire destroys the spores

IF a farmer understands the cultivation of a crop thoroughly he will succeed, for in order to do so he must also familiarize himself with the characteristics of the soil upon which the crop is to be grown and the plant food required Many crops are grown almost by chance because the farmer does not know the proper fertilizers to apply in order to secure a maximum crop

WHEN bran is purchased it takes the place of wheat and corn as food, thus permitting of the sale of the latter, the bran to be used as food. One advantage in the use of bran is that it brings upon the farm a greater proportion of phosphates than can be obtained from the whole grain, thus adding a valuable substance to the manure Where the soil is deficient in phosphoric acid a ton of bran used as food, will add to the manure three times as much phosphoric acid than would be obtained from corn Buy bran and sell corn.

A BROOD sow that has a range or a large yard, so as to have sufficient exercise will nearly always produce strong and vigorous pigs If too closely confined she becomes very fat, which is not a desirable condition for a brood sow.

A LARGE and heavy horse may possess greater strength than one of lighter weight, but a horse is intended for the road as well as to draw loads, which necessitates speed as well as strength for a general-purpose animal

Scraps of Knowledge

When dampening clothes for ironing use water as hot as the hand can bear; sprinkle the linen, fold smoothly, roll up tight and they will iron much easier The hot water penetrates more readily, and it is not necessary to dampen so much as when using cold water A clean whisk broom, kept for this purpose only, forms a handy implement for sprinkling

The most delicate way to boil an egg is to pour boiling water over it, and allow it to remain, without boiling, for ten minutes It will be found to be perfectly cooked

A cooling, wholesome drink is made by mixing two tablespoonfuls of pearl barley with a quarter of a pound of lump sugar Pour on it rather more than two quarts of boiling water Add the peel of a fresh lemon Let it stand all night, then strain, and it is ready for use

A good way to amuse a sick child who cannot sit up or entertain itself in ways ordinarily dear to the infantile soul is to arrange a mirror on an easel in such a way as to reflect the objects to be seen from the window If no easel is procurable an upright stick fastened to the back of a chair will answer the purpose and the mirror can be tilted at various angles and moved backward and forward to bring different portions of the outdoor scene into view If the child is too weary to care for the moving panorama of the street the glass can be made to reflect the restful blue of the sky or the billowy cumulus clouds, which will generally have a soothing effect and make tired eyelids droop and tired little bodies relax into health-giving slumber

If it is necessary to bathe in hard water, add a few drops of ammonia, or prepare powdered borax in hot water and pour in a little The borax can be kept bottled for use

When you are heated don't bathe the face in cold water After a journey, give the face a hot bath, which will remove the dirt and coal dust which has permeated the skin, then rinse in cool not cold, water At night, before retiring, bathe the face in hot water, then in cool, and wipe dry with a soft towel

When the piece de resistance is chicken, don't ask a guest if he prefers white or dark meat, serve a portion of both With roast it is customary to find out if he likes the beef rare or well done

Neufchatel cheese is delicious for spreading a brown bread sandwich Cut the bread thin use very little butter, then spread with the cheese Dip some water cresses in a French salad dressing, drain a moment, and inclose them between the slices of bread

'TIME was when trapping consisted mainly of setting traps and taking therefrom the easily secured captives but now it demands the closest study of wild creatures and their ways—has become, in fact, a strategic game between the highest form of reason and an instinct often so closely approaching reason that the dividing line is problematical The very difficulty of successful trapping, the keen observation and close study it demands and the delightful contact it insures with Nature's purest charms form its greatest attraction There is more excitement (of a certain kind) more pleasure and more genuine sportsmanship involved in trapping than in shooting game with gun or rifle simply because the one demands more knowledge and closer and longer continued relations with Nature than does the other '— 'Trapping and Home made Traps' in Outing for November

MEANDERING —A city girl writes "It is a fond dream of mine to become a farmer's wife and meander with him down life's flowery pathway" Ah, yes, that is a nice thing to dream about, but when you have lived on the farm and followed this meandering business for a month or so you will discover a wide chasm between the dream and the reality You will think of this about the time your husband meanders out and leaves you without wood and you have to meander up and down the lane pulling splinters off the fence with which to cook dinner And when you meander around in the wet clover in search of the cows you will have a dim perception that fond dreams do not always pan out a hundred cents on a dollar, and that there are several meanderings in farm life that are not listed in the dreaming category

The meandering business on the farm is not what it's cracked up to be —Texas Siftings

A NEW PICTURE SWINDLE —An exchange tells of the following way in which two sharpers are working a good game on the people of nearby towns,

'Two sharpers worked several towns on the picture swindle last week They called on a number of citizens, and for $2 50 to $5 promised to furnish an excellent crayon portrait in a handsome frame from a photograph They stated that they must first secure a photograph, they would take it to headquarters at Pittsburg and have the picture outlined then they would go back with the sample and show samples of frame material When this was done the patron would be expected to pay one-half the costs After the fellows received the photographs they went to the hotel and there they made outline sketches from the photographs After working the town diligently they suddenly left leaving fifty or sixty outline sketches of so many victims of the newest game'

A JOHNSTOWN FLOOD CASE —The Pittsburgh Telegraph remarks The United States Circuit Court has an interesting suit It is an echo of the great Johnstown flood, in the shape of a suit for damages brought by a Mrs Jenkins of Youngstown O, against the South Fork Club Throughout the statement forming the basis of the suit the South Fork Club is charged with being responsible for the terrible disaster This organization had possession of the old State canal reservoir, built 50 or 60 years ago repaired and beautified the adjoining lands and built a number of Summer cottages, etc The averment that the dam "broke" will be the central feature of the trial, the defense holding it is supposed, that the calamity was caused by the act of God, that a rainfall of eight or nine inches throughout the mountain regions was an unprecedented phenomenon, that three or four times as much rain fell in two days before the disaster than had ever been known to fall causing widespread disaster extending over an area of country ranging from the Potomac to the Susquehanna and Ohio The case is peculiar in many respects, but not without precedent for the guidance of the Court That it will be a hard fought contest is evident

WE have heard of fool killers of various sorts, but the neck tie that caused a Williamsport dude hostler to suicide, because he couldn't get it on properly, is the best one on record thus far

JUST THINK OF THIS

Fifteen Thousand Dollars

Seems like a large sum for one firm to have invested in ready-made Clothing in Gettysburg.

It is true, nevertheless, and as the senior member of the firm wishes to withdraw and that they may turn this into good hard cash, Stine & Son are selling their entire stock off at cost.

Just step in and examine goods and learn prices.
